SECOND LIFE
Redefined Home Boutique

➔ THIS LOCAL RETAILER and design firm, with shops on the Westside and in Brookhaven, has redefined itself. An early adopter of repurposed industrial artifacts, the store has recently emerged with soothing, neutral-toned vignettes featuring linen seating, upholstered headboards, and pale wooden china cabinets. Lighting (both lamps and chandeliers) and occasional tables (ranging from faux shagreen to button-tufted ottomans) are special strengths. redefinedhomeboutique.com

NEW HOME STORE
Dixon Rye

➔ WHAT FELLOW J. CREW alums and Westside neighbors Sid and Ann Mashburn are doing for clothes, Bradley Odom is doing for home decor. With a nod to its Southern roots, the store's wares reflect a love of hospitality, patina, and objects that tell a story. Displays range from Parisian ceramics by Astier de Villatte to taxidermy to abstracts by local artists. Furniture includes L.A.-based Sabin (an Atlanta exclusive) and Odom's own handsome upholstery line. dixonrye.com

VINTAGE REPRODUCTIONS
Rejuvenation

➔ DON'T OVERLOOK THIS treasure tucked into an easy-to-miss strip at Ponce City Market. Originally known for reproductions of antique house parts, Rejuvenation now focuses on vintage-inspired lighting, furniture, bath fixtures, and select antiques. The new Northwest Modern collection is a take on 1930s modernism inspired by the Pacific Northwest, where the brand originated before joining the Williams-Sonoma family in 2011. rejuvenation.com

LOCAL FURNITURE STORE
Mathews Furniture and Design

➔ THIS ISN'T YOUR grandmother's Mathews. Although the 35-year-old, family-owned Buckhead business still carries traditional reproductions (yes, even Stickley's Mission furniture), its current mix of classic and contemporary styles would impress any millennial. Recently it introduced Baker's hip Milling Road collection of modern tables and chairs and sleek beds, which a millennial might even be able to afford. mathewsfurniture.com
